Course Description
In this course, we will examine Buddhist discourses on the nature and operation of the mind. We will study basic Buddhist principles and diverse practices of mental cultivation based on ancient Buddhist texts and manuals that present unique perspectives on individual, family, and society at large and world. The main topics covered in this course include psychology of dhamma and the theory of “dependent co-arising”, relation between mind and body, sensory perception and obsession, intentional actions and human wellbeing, positive thinking and self-initiative, controlling emotions and mindfulness practice, selfless being and awakened mind.

Course Objectives
The course aims at training the students to:

- Learn the Buddha’s basic teachings on mind and its operation accurately while developing an enquiring mind within oneself;
- Learn to live a positive life while appreciating one’s own life and the lives of others;
- Look at the life and the world in a novel way “going against the currents” while developing interests in a conflict-free, stress-free, simple lifestyle;
- Identify the Buddha’s psychological terms and concepts while relating them to daily life.
Course Learning Outcomes

At the end of this course, students are expected to develop the ability to:

- Explain the Buddhist teachings on the nature and operation of the mind;
- Identify basic Buddhist psychological terms and concepts and relate them to understand one’s own life and the lives of others;
- Explain the reason for the existence of diverse Buddhist meditation techniques and practices as to cater to different personality types;
- Relate Buddhist ideas and principles in understanding and finding perpetual solutions to complex psychological, social, political and environmental issues in the modern world;
- Develop an appreciative and positive attitude towards one’s life, family, society and the world.

Knowledge and Skills

Through the course assignments, the Buddhist Studies programme expects students not only learn the subject matter but also acquire some transferable skills such as:

- Write concisely and with clarity;
- Effectively structure and communicate ideas;
- Explore and assess a variety of sources for research purposes;
- Make judgements involving the validity and cogency of arguments;
- Develop self-reflexivity.

What is reflective writing?

- Reflective writing is evidence of reflective thinking. In this reflective thinking, you will look back at an idea, concept, or theory learned in the course and see its relevance to analyze one of your unforgettable personal experiences in the past or a contemporary social issue that you have been interested in. You will analyze the experience or the issue that you choose, thinking in depth and from an enlightened perspective. You will try to explain it in relation to a Buddhist concept, model or theory discussed in the course. You will think carefully about what the idea, concept, model or theory means for you and your ongoing progress as a learner.

- Reflective writing is more personal than other kinds of academic writing. We all think reflectively in everyday life, but perhaps not to the same depth as that is expected in a good piece of reflective writing at university level. Reflective writing can be unstructured, for example when it is done in a personal diary. What is expected for this assignment is a carefully-structured writing.

A possible structure for reflective writing

Reflective writing can be broken down into three parts:

- Description: What happened? What is being examined?
- Interpretation: What is most important / interesting / useful / relevant about the object, event, issue or idea? How can it be explained in relation to the Buddhist concept or theory?
- Outcome: What have I learned from this? What does this mean for my future?

This is just one way of structuring a reflective writing. There are other ways. What is important is your own creativity. Whichever approach to reflection you use, try to bear in mind the following four key points:

- Reflection is an exploration and an explanation of events—not just a description of them;
- Reflective writing involves ‘revealing’ anxieties, errors and weaknesses, as well as strengths and successes. This is fine, if you show some understanding of possible causes, and explain how you plan to improve;
- It is necessary to select just the most significant parts of the event or idea on which you are reflecting. If you try to ‘tell the whole story’ you are likely to use up your words on description rather than interpretation.

[Please check the Moodle page of the course for some sample reflective writings.]
Grading
Grade for the reflective writing assignments will be decided based on creativity, clarity and organization of the presentation, accuracy in explaining or interpreting the Buddhist theory or concept, depth in reflection, and application of the concept to review and improve your personal life. References to sources outside the class lectures/lecture notes are not required.
